Such a structure would only be allowed if the two subunits of the dimer were associated through an inter-subunit interface located on the bottom edge of the C-terminal helix (Figure 5B{ref-type="fig"}), which is consistent with the presence of the nucleotide analogues in the cleft between the two subunits. DISCUSSION {#SEC4} ========== Here, we report the first crystal structure of the DNA non-specific topoisomerase I from the hyperthermophilic archaeon Pyrococcus furiosus, which is the first bacterial topo I structure reported to date. The structure presents some striking features. First, the mon 570a42141b
