Category:Solar-related softwarePuerto Rican bicentennial The Puerto Rican bicentennial () is a commemoration of the Puerto Rican people on the 200th anniversary of their island's independence, at which time the United States will become the 51st state. Planning for the bicentennial began in 1969. However, the celebrations had already been in progress since 1969, as numerous public events were being held on a regular basis. This included the opening of the National Institute of Puerto Rican History on January 4, 1973. There were also special campaigns to encourage more Puerto Ricans to participate in the celebrations. The governor of Puerto Rico at the time, Luis A. Ferré, placed a heavy emphasis on the bicentennial, which resulted in the creation of a commission to recommend a date for independence. On July 25, 1976, the Puerto Rican Independence Party, the largest political party that favored independence, was founded, led by Rafael Cancel Miranda. This created a schism in the political landscape. The Popular Democratic Party, which opposed independence, now had an ally in the Independence Party. 2d92ce491b
