Canucks only win if pucks bounce in net or in his pads. He doesn't have the legs to play like a traditional 2 way dman. He has the size to be a powerplay quarterback but he can't skate like a traditional 2 way dman. Maybe he'll be able to learn how to throw a one time pass or something. I know everyone thought his name was a play on the word "Luongo" but for whatever reason it makes no sense to me. he's got tons of potential. I have little doubt that he has the tools to be a solid dman in the future. In fact I think he has a high potential to be an above average D man. He has some tools and is a good skater. the only real problem is his conditioning and still trying to find his game. In the NHL you need two things and he doesn't have them, speed and strength. He doesn't have the speed to cover, let alone play. He can skate alright but his speed is only average. He can't generate any power at all and it takes him forever to get to full speed, he won't be covering much ground on the PK. The strength thing is a huge problem because it will hold him back from playing as a 2nd pairing guy. He can be a 1st pairing guy but he's got to play a physical game. I'd put him somewhere in the 60-80% range for potential as a 2nd pairing guy, I think he's good enough to be there but I wouldn't touch him with a 10 foot pole if I was playing him in the AHL. I think one thing the Canucks did right in getting him was getting him in the AHL first where they could teach him the basics of the game. They couldn't have sent him to the NHL for a long 2d92ce491b
