I'd like to be able to place an image into the back. I've looked at a number of tutorials and I can't find one that works. A: Because the wheels are two vertices in a face with normals pointing inwards and the image uses normals that go out, you can use the Mirror modifier and flip the image. Use the Mirror modifier. Turn off Delete, or Clear to Delete the image, and set the axis. In Edit Mode switch to the front view, select the image and press Ctrl-Tab to place in the 3D viewport. Keep pressing Tab until you see the image rotate. In the 3D viewport switch to the back view, and set the origin in the top-left corner of the window, and set the rotation to 90 degrees for Rotate View so that the image appears "facing" you. You'll need to change the image and the original as well to get it to show as a mirror. To change the image (that is, the animation) change the image, and to change the original, delete the image and place the original image (e.g. a PNG) there. This workflow requires the picture to be loaded as an image and not a shape, so change the original to a picture, not an object. Importing as an Image object requires your work to be object-based, so I prefer using shapes. Add the shape to a new layer, and cut it so that you can move it in the front viewport. Do the same for the image you want to duplicate, and cut it so that you can place it as a mirror in the back viewport, keeping the image face up so you can see the mirrored image. Both objects should be flipped as they need to be placed in the back viewport, but to change the content of the layer, don't use the Mirror modifier, but the Reshape modifier instead. Add the shape to a new
