(Phelps) Moloch is a sculpture of a 16th century Jewish ghetto in central Amsterdam commissioned by the city of Amsterdam. It was created by Joris van Schooten, a Dutch sculptor and painter who worked in the late 15th and early 16th centuries. The work, made of copper and various gemstones, was probably commissioned by the French admiral Abraham Janszoon de Vriese, the President of the Amsterdam Guild of Saint Luke (from 1572 to 1573) and an early opponent of the Reformation. The statue is located on a small plaza in front of the De Molijn Church. According to tradition, the statue is supposed to be the figure of a small child (a Moloch) while he receives worship as the Creator (the only way in the time of the Christian Reformation), kneeling and holding an olive branch. The placement of Moloch on the grounds of the "house of the Lord" is also supposed to suggest the biblical meaning of "house of our God", as the "house" was the city gates of the Jews. On top of Moloch stands a castle with a cupola and a cross. 2d92ce491b
