A trypsin-catalysed oligopeptide-selective method is introduced to the isolation of high purity human serum albumin (HSA) from Cohn fraction I. A simple and single-step procedure is carried out to purify HSA by adsorption onto a cationic oligopeptide adsorbent in which a trypsin-catalysed oligopeptide-selective adsorption technique is combined with desorption by a lowering of the pH. To minimize the trypsin contamination, the technique was modified to apply the trypsin contained in a previously added aliquot of the adsorbent. The adsorbent was prepared using a cationic oligopeptide as the primary ligand and two cationic polymers as the secondary ligand. d4474df7b8
