Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method for fabricating a thermal head with a large number of heating resistors, the thermal head being used for thermal printing on a thermally responsive paper. 2. Description of the Related Art In a thermal head of the kind mentioned above, a plurality of heating resistors are formed on a substrate, and electrode wires extend from the substrate for supplying power to these heating resistors. Generally, for the purpose of driving such a thermal head, a power supply is connected to the electrode wires of the thermal head. With this connection, an electric current is caused to flow from the power supply through the electrode wires, to the heating resistors on the substrate. As a result, the heating resistors generate heat to cause a thermal response, and an image is thereby printed on a thermal response recording paper. For the thermal head having a large number of heating resistors, an electric power supply is used that is higher in voltage and/or larger in current, than a single power supply of a type normally used to drive a thermal head of the kind mentioned above. However, when the power supply connected f30f4ceada
