Acclaimed Mac and PC music software for the Mac and PC.Q: My father's memories of WWII My grandfather, Father and I lived in Germany during the invasion and he remembers it very well. My grandfather was a high-ranking official in the military and had various responsibilities during the war. I just want to know if he was even aware of any sort of atrocities that happened in the war, and if so, what he remembers. Any information would be very appreciated. A: The short answer is that yes, he definitely has memories of the war, and he does know about atrocities and war crimes. The long answer can be divided into a) statements of fact and b) statements of opinion. First, some statements of fact: He was born into a privileged family. He was a Kavalier in the Wehrmacht, he was able to retire as a lieutenant colonel, etc., and it shows in his daughter's somewhat mawkish statements (e.g. "He loved being my father and spent as much time with me as he could."). He served in three different branches of the Wehrmacht. He started his career as a Panzergrenadier and rose to the rank of lieutenant colonel. He saw things that he remembers clearly. The battle of Stalingrad is a prominent example. He saw much of the war in the course of his duties. The Battle of the Bulge is an obvious example, but he was stationed in Thebes, Poland, in the closing days of the war, and as commander of the division that was tasked to invade France on D-Day, and thus saw the Battle of the Bulge firsthand, as did millions of soldiers around the world. Of course, this is all well and good, but it is incomplete. You might ask if he knew about atrocities during the war, and while that would be a more difficult question, it isn't impossible either. However, he does make a statement of opinion. His daughter and her husband have produced 3e33713323
