This program reads keycodes from another program and converts them to a macro. For example if you press the letter "F" on your keyboard the program will read that as a keycode and then auto-send the macro according to your settings. KEYMACRO: This is the program's website link. I have made one for every single application in my collection, however I have never updated them since I made them, so if yours is missing, it might not work. If you want the actual download link to your own collection of KeyMApp macros, follow this link: Download and install to your computer (remove any of the files in the archive you don't want): KEYMACRO: Ethereal has been made possible by the developer's generosity, so we have paid the developer to keep the program updated and "free" for everyone. You can download the program here: KeyMApp Ethereal The other day I was working on an old 6500 Apple IIGS, and I was trying to remember the name of the program that displays the image of a certain type of file (a certain file extension, in other words). For whatever reason, I couldn't remember it. I tried Googling it, but to no avail. Of course, I had it on my computer, and I just didn't have the proper technology to google it. Now I know the program I was looking for, but, of course, I can't remember what it was called. So I decided to put this to a vote. If you know this program, it's only fair that we all know what it's called. (Note: this is not a "Can I use this?" sort of poll. It's a "Name this program" sort of poll. You'll see the difference when you get there.) So, vote for what you think it is, and we'll see who gets it right. SlideShow is a handy, simple, easy to use tool specially designed to help you view your images in full screen. The program launches a File Chooser. After you select the first image to display it goes to full screen mode with a black background and no border. Use arrow keys, Page Down/Up, or Home, End to navigate. Delete will move it to a folder called _Delete, C will copy to _Copy, R will rotate right, L will rotate left, the space bar will display detailed EXIF info, and Esc will 80eaf3aba8
