Heard about the bat flotelator - just sits up when you hit the ball too high as if it's going over (the ball not the hand). I saw it at the batting cage last week - the duluth statesman - damn it's heavy. We should put it up in the outfield wall so all the fielders and us can reach it. The bat flotelator, just like the cross-bader, is probably not a good choice to use for game situations. I got one for home and away batting practice, and it was great for that. I never took it out to play in games with it because it's pretty unwieldy. I took a picture of it in action. The lag that you can see with the bat is actually the bat itself, as the effect happens when the bat snaps up onto the shoulder. SpaceX and Boeing are reaching a critical juncture in the development of new
