This is a great little program. I find it a lot more intuitive than xBigShow. Posted on Oct 12, 2014 for PC by angelatelli Works OK for the most part. Any DVI files that are created are unrecognized. There are several thumbnails in the program that are not loaded and work just fine. They just appear on the desktop with a double exposure. Anyways, it only took a few seconds to fix and be fine. I had some images that would open with v0.8 and not any other version. It looks like the images will be fixed with the next update. Works OK for the most part. Firstly, my motor is a 12" Straight, Sanyo 12v 500w headless motor. The other day, I was watching the motors on youtube, and watched a guy discussing how to spot cut his motor and how to spot cut his homing servo. He mentioned the use of a sharp knife, so I went out and got myself one and tried out the spot cutting method on 09e8f5149f

The manual of BigShow is written in two languages, French and English. You can get BigShow from the link: Added On: 16/08/2006 Added On: 06/06/2009 Added On: 06/06/2010 Added On: 15/06/2013 Added On: 01/09/2016 Features: *This product supports all versions of Windows 98, 2000, ME, XP, Vista *The application provides three options to fill displays best set at 800 x 600 or 1024 x 768 *Runs in standalone mode without any desktop Windows manager requirements *It is NOT A DLL. It's a very fast, professional and powerful Full Screen clock/message displayer with text smoothing *It supports all languages *It is free and open source software, released under the GNU GPL A: Just to add a few features that are sadly missing from all other answers: Big Clock is a free open-source alternative to BigShow. To use it, place the executable in the main installation directory, no need to install anything else. Big Clock supports the 64-bit version of Windows, running on both 32-bit and 64-bit systems. You can install the windows version of BigClock and the GNU-based (command-line) version of BigClock in parallel and use both at the same time, if you wish. BigClock offers more options, but it's not as easy to use. If you're looking for something with a GUI, BigShow is the way to go. BigClock is a much more reliable clock. It doesn't have the problems BigShow has and seems to work as it was designed to do. A: BigShow - Cl

The Large Display Options allows you to set the size and position of the contents of a display, so you can choose the best size and position for your time, text, time and date displays. The first option will display the large digital clock, which can also be used to display an appointment, to display a large stop watch, to display a large date and to display a large size format text message. The second option will automatically fill a display with time, date, time and text, in 3 columns, where you can move and resize the columns anywhere within the display. The scrolling message is just what it says, it will continuously scroll a large text message within a display area, you can scroll anywhere within the display, up and down, left and right. The message can be reset to the beginning by holding down the 'End' key or you can move it to another screen using the 'Insert' key. A: There are 3 main options that can be used to display text messages and date/time on a monitor: Large Memory Font 2 Column Text Scrolling Text Since your question is about displaying a time/date text, the first 2 will be most suitable as all these options respect the memory allocated to the monitor text, so they won't resize the screen. The 3rd option does not respect the memory allocated to the monitor text and therefore can put out of the screen the displayed text messages. To display a date/time in a text format, you can set the date and the time individually in the Control Panel (that's the item with the clock symbol on it). Select Start → Display → Settings → Display → General and there you will find everything you need to display date/time in a text format. Open the Display control panel Open the [Control Panel] Select Panel [Control Panel] Select Display In the [Display] menu select View → Date and Time. Display the 1st Date column with the Date Format and the 2nd column with the Time Format. Close the window. If you want a more stylish and modern appearance, you can find Time fonts here, which is a collection of 16 fonts designed for displaying time on a computer monitor. A: In my case it was CTRL+I.
