The reason for this is that the HTML file being placed will contain data that is pulled out of the database and that needs to be displayed on a specific location. It is currently possible to do this by placing an HTML file in the root of the project and this is working great. However, I need to do this in the ASP.NET Core environment where I am unable to call the static html page within the ASP.NET Core project. My idea was to place the static html file as a file that is in the class library. My question is how would I go about calling the HTML file from the project that is currently running ASP.NET Core and just insert it into the static HTML. I am not sure if I am just missing a small piece of the puzzle or if I have to use a different approach to do what I am trying to do. Any help is much appreciated, thanks. A: The simplest solution is to create a Razor class that renders the HTML into the view, and render this from your razor view. For example, the following Razor class would place a tweet into a heading: using System.IO; using System.Web.WebPages; using System.Web.Razor.Hosting; public class TweetableHeading : RazorPage { public TweetableHeading() { this.Heading = "This is a tweet"; } public TweetableHeading(Stream tweetableHeading) : base(tweetableHeading) { this.Heading = "This is a tweet"; } public string TweetableHeading { get; set; } }
