From Wikipedia - Photoshop It is an image-editing software program developed by Adobe. In its earliest form, Photoshop was available only as a plug-in for the Macintosh operating system. It debuted in beta version 2, the first version that was available for both Macintosh and Windows platforms, on August 4, 1990. It became available as a stand-alone program on June 5, 1992, with version 3.0. In 1991, Photoshop became available for the Windows platform and was no longer tied to a Macintosh computer and its operating system. A commercial version of Photoshop called Photoshop Elements was released on September 11, 2003. The program is available for both Windows and Macintosh. Adobe Photoshop: The Main Applications Photoshop has many features for all types of editing, using the lasso selection tool, fill and stroke, normal and photo-editing tools. Images can be edited completely, or layers, subject to a canvas, are separated and enabled. The users can enhance and animate the layers and create a new image. It contains many application functions such as image enhancement, three different brushes, eight filters, as well as many eraser tools. Photoshop Elements in contrast is a powerful program to edit most types of images. The library contains 12 different tools. It has the same tools as the professional version of Photoshop, as well as a few extra ones. It also has tools for different file types. It contains layer support and the ability to add new layers and erase part of the image. The main limitation of the program is that it does not contain many tools for business and professional users. This is why most graphic designers use Photoshop instead. Q: MATLAB - HLS: How to programmatically determine if the HLS format is supported? I have an application that communicates with an OpenXRT server using xRTToolbox. I want the application to be able to determine if the server supports HLS on its system, and if so, select which encoder to use. Is it possible to do this? [edit] The server I am working with is an OpenXRT server running at Purdue University. It is a python application. I noticed a few things about it: The python application has an hls module that I think can be used to read and write HLS files. This application also appears to have a module called source_api.py which it uses as a base to implement XRToolbox. However, it does not appear to provide an easy way to read an HLS file into matlab. A: What you want is not a feature of xRTToolbox but a feature of the HLS format and how one can read such a file. The HLS format is simple and consists of a sequence of commands, where each command consists of the HLS name followed by either 'v' which signals a Video stream or 's' which signals a Series of images. For example: something.com:s1v:2 Meaning that if something.com is a video stream and the first video segment is v:2. So I would think that you would be able to identify a HLS stream using a simple pattern matching, for example looking for either a 'v' or a 's' at the beginning of a URL. The "magic" part (the bit that doesn't look like a string) should be used to decide which part is actually a stream. It is the first character of a string after the 'v' or 's' but before the stream name. So if you have a library called stream_parser, I suggest you should be able to: function hasHLS(url) hasHLS = false; url_part = strtrim(url); if url_part(end-1) == 'v' hasHLS = true; elseif url_part(end-1) == 's'

A Little Bit About Me You know about my day to day, I am a stay-at-home-mom of a two and half year old, and a wife of a wonderful husband of ten years. This blog is about my crafty adventures, my life with my sweetie, and how our young family embraces the Everyman approach to life. Cookies April 14, 2007 A big thank you to everyone who has already mailed their bits in for our Baby Tree. We are less than one week away from wrapping up the whole project, and we can't thank you enough. One of the most fantastic things about this project is getting to meet so many wonderful people through it all. You've donated at the garage sale, volunteered, sent in a letter and now you are helping us spread the word about other people and raising funds in return. On that note, I wanted to remind everyone that we still have a couple weeks left in our festivities. It is a range. I checked it and found it had no inverter. How do I get one? This is so embarrassing. thanks. You don't have to buy something that's not made for the range. I have a 2002 model (Cub is the brand, not to be confused with a Cub Cadet) that's still in perfect shape. They were made by the same manufacturer that sold the Little Jimmy brand, you know, that Little Tikes action figure. The main difference is the mounting brackets in the cub and the cub had a power switch, a thermostat, and 1/8" inlet and outlet tubes. The Leafman had 2 1/2" inlet and outlet tubes. If you don't find the power switch in the box, just write it down as it is the most important part of the model. The only issue I have with my cub is that it doesn't have a thermostat. With my other cordless model, I leave it on 24/7, because it started running around the house when I wasn't even using it. Do you think this will work with my leaf blower? I just want it to turn on when the machine switches it on
