Former NBA star Charles Barkley had a piece published on his old network (Turner) during All-Star weekend. He spoke on the topic of the Warriors new coach: Warriors winning the way they are today is similar to the 70s San Francisco Warriors. The Warriors were fun to watch and they weren't very good at all. The one thing I liked about that team was the defense. If you didn't score, they were going to get you. They didn't have the deep roster the Warriors do today, but the Warriors defense is as good as any team in the league. Barkley's comments were fair. The Warriors roster is loaded with talented, defensive-minded players. Stephen Curry, Klay Thompson, Draymond Green, Andre Iguodala, Kevin Durant, DeMarcus Cousins and DeMarcus Cousins, Draymond Green, DeMarcus Cousins, Kevin Durant, Draymond Green, DeMarcus Cousins. The Warriors defense isn't a strength like it was in the 70s, but the frontcourt is loaded with elite defenders. It's certainly not the worst defense in the league, but the Warriors ability to make opponents shoot bad looks is interesting. Suffice to say, this was going to be a great topic to research and write about. Yesterday, I hopped on Twitter and searched "all-star battle." I set it to search every tweet over the course of the night. I came up with this little bit of information: Warriors (All-Star Game) 4.41M "Nuggets (All-Star Game)" 0.69M "Knicks (All-Star Game)" 0.46M The Warriors were the most talked about team during the All-Star Game. The Warriors led all team's in viewers 4bc0debe42
