The present invention relates to an apparatus and a method for processing signals. More particularly, the invention relates to an apparatus and a method for processing signals for pre-processing and post-processing a video input signal. Conventionally, an apparatus for post-processing a video signal has been suggested, which post-processes the video signal by combining the video signal with a pre-processed video signal. In a video signal pre-processing circuit for the apparatus suggested by JP-A No. Hei7-68690, input signals are selected from the video signals and supplied to a plurality of video signal processing circuits. Therefore, the circuits, which can be used to process the video signal, cannot be shared. Moreover, when the circuit combination is changed for every type of video signal, the circuit cannot be shared. In order to share a plurality of circuits while the circuit combination is changed, a bypass circuit is additionally necessary, as disclosed in JP-A No. Hei11-17582. Therefore, in a video pre-processing circuit using a bypass circuit, when a video signal of a line group changing in the horizontal direction is pre-processed, the line group is divided into groups of the same horizontal scanning period and is passed to the respective

Natural and unnatural sources of angiotensin-I converting enzyme in the normal and hypertensive kidney: an immunocytochemical study. The subcellular distribution of angiotensin-I converting enzyme (ACE) was studied in the kidney in natural and experimental hypertensive rats. ACE was localized immunocytochemically using a monoclonal antibody to the enzyme in cortical and juxtamedullary glomeruli and tubules of perfusion-fixed kidneys, in frozen sections of freshly collected whole kidney and in the microdissected kidney cortical slice. Immunohistochemical staining was observed only in glomeruli and proximal tubules. In the perfusion-fixed kidneys, ACE staining was found in the cytoplasm of renal capillary endothelial cells, in some intraglomerular arterial and peritubular capillary endothelial cells and in juxtamedullary glomerular capillary loops. Perfusion fixation resulted in a loss of staining in the cytoplasm of some proximal tubules. In the microdissected kidney cortical slice, ACE was immunolocalized to the apical and basolateral aspects of the tubular luminal cells. Immunocytochemical staining was also observed in proximal tubular segments of the juxtamedullary glomeruli in the perfusion-fixed kidney. Immunostaining for glomerular macrophages was 09e8f5149f
