A novella about the mutability of memory, a plan to remember our loved ones before they depart, and an encounter with a parallel universe. Welcoming an Archivist in a small office hidden deep in the structure of the Capitol, the Senate Archives sit in their archive rooms, cataloguing documents to be secured by the appropriate committees. Capitolia's widely covered gossip mill is filled with whispers of revolution, but there are only two archivists in the building: Muad'men Hassra and Kalajani Tarkka. Until Tarkka was officially appointed after her graduation, Hassra worked the halls of the Capitol with Muad'men's guidance. Always encouraging, Muad'men has long since abandoned the Senate Archives, leaving Hassra and Kalajani to keep the important secrets of the Senate and the Capitol safe from those who would do harm to their country. Kalajani, now a gleaming new employee of the Senate Archives, works with Hassra to cover all the bases, cataloguing and organizing all of the files. Hassra jokingly refers to herself as the man behind the desk, Kalajani calls her boss the funny one, and the two work together to keep the Senate secret from prying eyes. But their relationship is about to change, and it will take both of them to change the course of the Senate's secret history, and how they remember and preserve it. Original Story: November 22, 2017 Final Word: 3.8 What a GREAT way to celebrate the winter solstice. My body is loving me right now, I think I'm going to head to the sauna after this chapter...
