Where does “HyperMotion” come from? “HyperMotion Technology” is a synthesis of Motion capture technology, intelligent AI, gameplay and player positioning. Movement and positioning is key to any game of football. People commonly use the phrase “you shouldn’t be able to do that.” Although, sometimes, they can. The “HyperMotion” tracking system is made up of sensors, microphones and algorithms which collect in-game data to create data movements that a player can control during gameplay. How does “HyperMotion” work? Using data collected from a full-length match, FIFA 22 players are able to sprint, jump, glide, move and beat opponents with ease. The ability for virtual players to actually move with a player’s natural physical movement is at the heart of the simulation process, and is the cornerstone of “HyperMotion.” How does it work in FIFA 22? FIFA 22 players are able to move realistically and realistically navigate the pitch, react to their positioning and react to the actions of opponents by mimicking the gestures of each player. What’s new in the “HyperMotion” integration? The inclusion of the “HyperMotion” technology results in an enhanced football experience for virtual players. For starters, FIFA 22 features a new “Run and Jump” system for “hybrid ball” control. The player can choose when to run and how high they want to jump. This control system allows players to choose the pace and height of their jump, it also applies to the direction of a player’s run and jump. The player is also able to control the ball using the new “Dynamic Tempo” system, which dynamically change the player’s speed in response to the play as they navigate the pitch. What’s more, when using the “Dynamic Tempo” system, the player can choose a movement path based on the player’s position on the pitch and also the speed of the on-ball action. This enables players to control passes, but also react to the actions of opponents by changing direction without leaving the pitch or losing the ball. How does “HyperMotion” help players? The “HyperMotion” technology enables players to complete controlled and goal-oriented runs and move
