Spring is upon us! With this screensaver you can experience spring in all its glory, from the emergence of flowers, to the color of the sky, and the change of weather. If you do not use 3D monitors, you will see the screen in the correct aspect ratio for your resolution, 720 x 480. The CPU load is very low, so it is perfect for Intel Core Duo/Dyanmar/Pentium D processors. You are free to add your review and vote. What you think about Spring Blossoms? The Nexus of Bounded Chambers and the Astoundments of Holy Order Our intellectual development leads us to progress towards God. -René Descartes, Discourse, section 6. The two fundamental minds of a rational creature are the intellect and the will. The intellect is the passive faculty for the cognization of truth, and the will is the active faculty for the cognization of will. Through the intellect, one discovers truth, and through the will one discovers good. Through the will, one cognizes to do good, and through the intellect one cognizes to do good. In this framework, the participation of the will and intellect helps create an active quality of a rational creature. The intellect is able to discover truth, but the will is able to learn what is better for the individual. The will then engages in a process of self-betterment. Betterment leads the will towards something greater, in this case, God. This process of betterment leads the will to its maximum potential. This is when the will then becomes irrevocably set towards God. The will then begins to act as God's instrument. The will takes on a holy quality that allows it to act freely. The intellect can discover truth, but the will takes action. The discovery of truth is a quality of the intellect, not the will. The will is only able to discover truth if it is set in the direction of God. The intellect is passive, but the will is active. This is why the intellect is able to cognize truths, but the will is unable to cognize good until it is set upon God.
