July 22, 2013 - 9:43 am The Saint Paul City Council voted to approve a specific plan for a mixed-use development at St. Anthony Park. The plan, which is the first comprehensive one for the project since the area was zoned in 2006, will call for residential, retail and office development at 65th and University Avenues. The development will include 200 units of housing for seniors, 230 units of family housing and 190,000 square feet of retail or restaurant space, depending on how it is designed. The new development will contribute to the city's desire to provide affordable housing by offering a mix of affordable and market rate units. Local start up Solid State Paper Ltd. is building the new development. This is their second project in the area. The first project was a recently completed development at the corner of Hinman and Waring. Council members approved the plan at Monday's meeting with strict new rules that many community activists say will not make it possible for the St. Anthony Park project to develop into the mixed-use project it's envisioned

In a drive system of in-wheel suspension system, a power source system is required that can supply a power to electric elements in a range from zero to maximum speed. For this reason, in the system, generally, a power source system is constituted by a combination of a battery and a capacitor as a power source unit. When a capacitor is used as a power source unit, a sufficient voltage is assured by a charge that has elapsed in the capacitor during an idle running operation. Thus, the capacitor-type power source unit is used in a running state in which a rotation speed of a vehicle is low. Meanwhile, when the rotation speed of a vehicle is high, a voltage value of a power source unit cannot assure a sufficient voltage in some cases, and for this reason,

Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a mobile communication terminal that includes an attachment part for the attachment of an attachment such as a key chain and an eyeglass temple. 2. Description of the Related Art There is a mobile communication terminal such as a mobile telephone terminal that is attachable to, for example, a key ring. This mobile communication terminal includes an attachment part (attachability part) that is attachable to a key ring. There is also a mobile communication terminal that is attachable to eyeglasses, a watch chain, a necklace, or the like that is made of metal. It is desirable that the attachment part that is attachable to, for example, a key ring be made of metal because this ensures enough durability. However, even if the attachment part that is attachable to the metal-made chain is made of metal, the attachment part may be worn away because a metal chain is attached to the attachment part through friction. If this kind of attachment part for attaching the chain is worn, the wearing surface of the attachment part is exposed, so that this part may easily be broken by wearing. In addition, when a wearer touches the wearing surface of this attachment part, this part may be easily broken. This is another problem. It is also desirable that the attachment part that is attachable to, for example, eyeglasses be made of metal because this ensures enough durability. However, even if the attachment part that is attachable to eyeglasses is made of metal, the attachment part may be worn away because a metal chain is attached to the attachment part through friction. This kind of attachment part for attaching eyeglasses is also worn, so that the wearing surface of the attachment part is exposed. When this kind of attachment part is worn, this part may easily be broken by wearing. In addition, when a wearer touches the wearing surface of this attachment part, this part may be easily broken. In order to solve these problems, the inventors of the present invention have proposed a mobile communication terminal in which the attachment part is attached to the attachment part and is prevented from being pulled and broken off (Japanese Unexamined Patent Application Publication No.
