Consismemecer.Range trees, more commonly known as k-d trees, are widely used to perform nearest neighbor queries and comparisons. They rank by range in order to quickly identify the closest data item to a query. Data items are sorted according to distance from the query. The k-d tree typically maintains a number of linked nodes, each of which can be searched in $\log(k)$ time. Examples of k-d trees are described in a co-pending U.S. patent application Ser. No. 08/570,481 to Dean and entitled "Method and Apparatus for Associating Information with a Data Structure" and in a co-pending U.S. patent application Ser. No. 08/766,519 to Dean and entitled "Method and Apparatus for Maintaining a Data Structure in Conjunction With Associated Indexes", both of which are incorporated herein by reference. More particularly, the k-d tree can be thought of as a vertical segment of a binary tree with the nodes being arranged along one axis. A node is connected to two descendant nodes and has the value of the minimum of these two values. If a node has a value equal to its parent, then the parent and its descendants are known as the left child, and the right child, respectively. The branch below a node is called its left branch, and the branch above is called its right branch.

Each node
