Urdu is the language of Pakistan which was the Mughal empire's official language, before the rule of the British. The devised Urdu is a mix of Persian and indigenous languages. The changeover from Persian to Urdu was gradual. The shift from Persian to Urdu was made by the Mughal emperor, Shah Jahan. He was the first Muslim ruler to establish the use of Urdu as the official language in India. Before that, the use of Persian was widespread. After the rule of the Mughals, Urdu spread in India. Urdu became the primary language in the era of the first set of Mughal Empire because it was the language of royalty and nobility. Then it slowly became the primary language because of the influence of the Mughals. Urdu spread in people for many reasons, not just because of the Mughals. It was the language that was used by the Mughals, so much so that it was the language of pride for the Mughal emperors to speak in the land. Ursa Dasi was even given to the Mughal emperors as a gift. The language spread to India when Babur came to India and made it the official language of the Mughals. The use of Persian as the language by the Mughals was limited as Shah Jahan became the emperor. Most of the bureaucracy was in Persian in India at that time. The influence of the Mughals also helped to further the use of Urdu language. The use of Arabic also became popular. The Arabs became the biggest influence of the use of Urdu in India. It was the language spoken by the aristocracy and royalty.

Persian also helped the use of the language.

Persian was also used in schools as the language was taught by the Arabs and Arabs were teaching the language. Persian also helped the elites to adopt the use of Urdu. It was an important factor to why Urdu became the language of the elites. The Arabic language was also used to teach Islamic studies. Persian was also used to teach the subjects of Islam, but Arabic was more focused to Islam. The Arabs in India also became known for their language of Urdu. The use of Arabic was at a high level in India and in the East because of the Arabs. The use of Urdu also spread to the Indian cities
