Flash Drive is a very common storage devices nowadays. People use flash drives a lot for many different reasons – to store data (computer/phone/tablet), or share music, videos, and documents with family or friends. But sometimes, it seems like these flash drives won't stay durable. So, why can we not backup data and other important files on the flash drive? We may be easily lost on the exact reason for this. So, in this article, I will be sharing 2 main reasons of flash drives to be unexpectedly damaged – 1) "endurance", and 2) "shock". Endurance – This is the ability of the flash drive to sustain data despite wearing or bad conditions (over use, improper storage, bad power). Shock – When a flash drive is dropped or bumped too hard, it might become defective. I have seen more than 5 flash drives being damaged because they are too old (out of date). Every flash drive should have a warranty period of 12 months, even if it was new. You can refer to the warranty sheet that came with your flash drive to know how long it will last. If you think your flash drive is damaged, check if the flashing LED's (light-emitting diode) is still blue, or if its charge is enough. If both of the condition apply, then it's already damaged. It's suggested that if you try to open the slot using another card and flash drive, you can determine the damaged part. For the flash drive that looks fine, but suddenly stopped working, it may not be damaged. It is suggested to turn it off and on again to check if the LED's are flashing. If it is, there is no need to worry. Just make sure that it's fully charged before you start using it. As the lifespan of a flash drive is 12 months, there's no need to keep it longer. Your flash drive will automatically switch to standby mode after 2 years without using it. Although it is not suggested to store or use a flash drive after the warranty period, but it is definitely OK. It may cause a small loss in file storage. If you need to store or backup data, you can consider getting a 2nd flash drive. In this case, you can easily swap the 2nd flash drive when it's time to use it. If it is not a flash drive that you need to get updated

Results of a prospective study of Clostridium difficile in patients with inflammatory bowel disease. Patients with inflammatory bowel disease (IBD) are at increased risk of Clostridium difficile colitis. Although this disease is frequently chronic, only sporadic cases have been reported to require colectomy. We conducted a prospective study of the incidence, presentation, recurrence, and morbidity of C. difficile colitis in patients with IBD. Patients with ulcerative colitis (n = 60), Crohn's disease (n = 58), or indeterminate colitis (n = 27) were included. Patients were followed for 12 months. Using the modified Richette protocol, C. difficile toxin was measured by enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay from stool samples of patients with diarrhea for three consecutive days. Stools were also examined for C. difficile bacteria by polymerase chain reaction. In 43 of the total 107 patients (40%), C. difficile was identified from 95 C. difficile-positive stools. C. difficile was more likely to be present in patients with Crohn's disease than ulcerative colitis (P = .046). Twenty-eight of the 43 patients (65%) who were C. difficile positive had a positive history of antibiotic therapy. Twelve patients (28%) had no identifiable antibiotic exposure but developed an initial episode of diarrhea. Fourteen patients (33 595f342e71
