What Is Crypto? As stated previously, Bitcoin, and all other cryptos, are not money. They are just a digital representation of value that can be transferred on the blockchain network. The true story is much more interesting. Before now, I have mentioned the three components that make up the entire crypto network: Cryptography – Very high-grade encryption software that is used to secure the network. A good implementation of cryptography will allow an average person to carry out some important tasks of everyday life securely. Technology – The distributed blockchain network that exists to support the activity of the cryptos within the network. Decentralization – The network is a decentralized network (or distributed network, as it is often described) that allows its users to run the applications that they need without any central authority having to regulate them. The problem that Satoshi tried to solve with cryptocurrencies was that they did not need to be controlled by a central entity. However, they needed to protect the users' privacy. With the use of cryptography in the form of public key/private key encryption, it was possible to make the transactions on a ledger completely anonymous. Why Is Cryptocurrency Important? If you are a reader of this article, then you probably see the utility that crypto has. It is one of the fastest growing industries at the moment. The crypto industry has now grown to an estimated $250 billion, it will grow to $2.4 trillion in 2018. Even in a world that is constantly on the move, as it is today, the centralized institutions that are the banks and central authorities do not support the kind of international transfers that crypto can provide. Let's dive into the main aspects that help our readers to understand why crypto is taking off the way it is, and why you should be investing in it now. Multiplier Effect If you are a reader of this article, you may be wondering how you can invest in cryptos. They are usually traded on exchanges in which you can purchase them with fiat currency. However, the platform of the exchange is usually controlled by a centralized company, and the lack of regulatory guidelines around the purchase of cryptocurrency from exchanges 05a79cecff

First-time Abuser of the Day: Documentary Filmmaker By The Editors June 6, 2014 [Editor's Note: The Guilty Pleasure received more than 100 nominations in its first year, but we had to narrow the list down to ten in this year's edition. You can vote once a day through July 15 for our contenders.] [See the other nominees here.] Has there ever been a more perfect time to be a documentarian? We are all sitting around with our smartphones, never leaving the couch, and the cost of time and gas has been cut to a minimum. You can take the camera in your lap and go on a road trip, and with a couple of ways to transfer files, you can easily edit everything you shoot even while your driving. Best of all, the technological advances in digital filmmaking have finally brought the DIY approach to the masses. Anyone can film a documentary with the simple tools in their garage, and the new smartphone apps are making editing easier than ever. It's hard to believe there was a time when documentaries were only reserved for established institutions like PBS and National Geographic. But every documentary filmmaker knows that jumping into filmmaking with little or no experience makes for a difficult road. Filmmakers such as Carey Jones document the adventure with their films, which have become an important source of inspiration for new filmmakers. The Guilty Pleasure recently caught up with the film's producer and director to ask about this journey.  How did the idea for a documentary about light in our lives begin? Carey Jones: The idea of creating a documentary about light began with an article by Steve Goodman, an anthropologist, in Dwell Magazine in 2002 about the cultural significance of light. He traced the concept back to ancient civilizations and then to modern times and made the argument that we as a culture now spend most of our waking lives in artificial lighting. When I went on my first backpacking trip in 2007, I had no idea that I'd become a full-fledged natural light devotee. Back in 2007, I had just purchased my first Canon G12 digital camera. I embarked on the whole backpacking thing with no idea how I would use the camera, and at the time, digital had just started to take off. One of the biggest surprises was that I was willing to pay more money than I would have for other photos and videos, because the light was so important

President Trump Donald John TrumpFederal prosecutor speaks out, says Barr 'has brought shame' on Justice Dept. Former Pence aide: White House staffers discussed Trump refusing to leave office Progressive group buys domain name of Trump's No. 1 Supreme Court pick MORE tweeted late Tuesday that "tremendous progress" was being made in the government shutdown negotiations, and predicted the government would be back "fully open" in about three weeks. Tweet The president added later Tuesday that he "never" wanted the shutdown to happen, but it was necessary to get his wall funding. "It is merely a delay in order to have what is already being built, but it is being built," he said. ADVERTISEMENT Trump began tweeting about the shutdown just after midnight Tuesday, hours after the longest shutdown in U.S. history had broken the 24-hour mark. He was reacting to a statement by Senate Minority Leader Charles Schumer Chuck SchumerDemocrats scramble on COVID-19 relief amid division, Trump surprise Pelosi, Schumer 'encouraged' by Trump call for bigger coronavirus relief package Schumer, Sanders call for Senate panel to address election security MORE (D-N.Y.) on the Senate floor that the negotiations between the White House and Democratic leaders had reached a "stalemate." "There are real problems with the President's position," Schumer said. "I would say the President is not ready to approve even $1.6 billion, and we have no intention of budging." Trump had held out for more than $5 billion for border wall funding in his negotiations with Democratic leaders and Congressional leaders, as well as White House officials and staff. He has said the $1.3 billion in border security funds allocated by Congress last year was not enough and that he's prepared to declare a national emergency in order to get funding for the wall. ADVERTISEMENT The White House has said the president was willing to accept a short-term extension for funding for the Homeland Security Department to keep the government open. But Democratic leaders have rejected that offer. The partial government shutdown, now in its 26th day, is the longest ever in U.S. history. Democrats have said they will not fund Trump's border wall, while White House officials have said they will not approve a measure that does not have the president's border wall funding. Trump and Democrats have offered competing plans to reopen the government. Trump's plan would
