sour beers are a unique style of beer that is enjoyed around the world. sour beers are fermented with specific bacteria, rather than yeast, and are characterized by their sharpness, tartness and high acidity. some styles of sour beer are readily available in the united states and europe, but are often hard to find in other regions of the world. sour beers are usually made with the use of large amounts of lactic acid and acetic acid (vinegar), and are quite different from the sour beer found in much of the rest of the world. in general, sour beers are a very good match with foods such as chocolate, coffee, cheese, chocolate, pickled vegetables, cheeses and pickled foods. india red ales are a hybrid style of beer that combines an english pale ale with an american amber ale. india red ales have a rich amber color, and are moderately-strong, with high hop bitterness. india red ales have a bit more body and alcohol than an english pale ale, and a bit less bitterness than an american amber ale. the porter style is a well-balanced, sometimes roasty, sometimes sweet, and almost always well-hopped beer. a classic style, the porter is the british take on the stout. this style is typically made with dark malt in the malt bill and often with a high to medium hopping rate. the beer can be dry or sweet, though the word dry usually refers to a style that exhibits a high hop content and low residual sugar, while sweet refers to a style that has a medium or high residual sugar, and a low hop content. this style is often served in ceramic, where it develops a head. breweries such as newcastle, bass, guinness, molson and others have made porter a highly valued beer style, as it is an exceptionally versatile beer. if you like stouts, porters are a good introduction to the style. if you like the maltiness of stouts, porters can be a great fit. and, if you like the flavor profile of stouts, porters are a great way to try the style.
